The grapes were harvested and destemmed by hand on October 1st. Fermentation took place with the entire mash. The mash was punched down daily, and after 14 days, the grapes were pressed to completely extract the fermented juice from the berries. The wine was then racked into two 500-liter barrels made of local acacia wood. Over a period of two months, the lees were stirred several times, thus highlighting the delicate flavor profile of the Roter Traminer.
